CCNA Network Visualizer.7.0.RegIBR[CRACK].The MPAA has spent a significant amount of time and energy trying to block streaming services because they compete with their DVD and Blu-ray business. The problem is, media companies have to realize that streaming is no match for the collection of eyeballs that can go directly to any website they choose. We wrote about the launch of Disney+ back in July. Shortly after, we received an e-mail from Disney asking us to give the service a review. Essentially, the email stated that Disney wanted us to do a direct comparison of the service to cable. Needless to say, we weren't going to cut the cord. Streaming was, and is, a viable option for consumers, but the quality of services will vary wildly from one company to the next, even from one streaming service to the next. If there's one thing that we learned from this testing, it's that most people do not want to subscribe to any kind of cable service. While we can't necessarily say that streaming service is the future of entertainment, we can state that it is a viable option for the average consumer. And once Netflix and other services have a wider selection of movies and TV shows, the popularity of streaming will only go up. And if media companies are going to keep people from cutting the cable cord, they're going to have to provide higher quality streams than they are today. Otherwise, they'll lose that valuable channel of eyeballs. Source: Ars Technica 595f342e71
